

Definition of Suburbanised Village

A suburbanised village is a settlement made up largely of daily commuters who are employed elsewhere in a larger centre. These commuters have displaced the original residents or live in new housing at the edge of the town or village. Suburbanised villages are characterised by a lack of retail outlets since the commuters will use services in the centre of the city or in out of town shopping centres.